

5 Ways to Cook Reflection

This was one of the very first projects I completed during this program and in doing so, I wanted to display my thoughts, views and just overall understanding before I developed during the program. Because this was my first project, we kind of started the course running out of the gate but I enjoyed the simplicity but also the complexity of this project. The biggest challenge for me was time, because in my previous projects in undergrad I never had a time constraint like this before. I thought this project was a great way to let students dive into the program and for the professor to get an idea of where the students land within what they already know. Overall, I really enjoyed this first project and when I looked back at the project, I am glad I did this project because it helped my foundation throughout this course.